

There are 248 cities in the United States having a population of 10,000 or over.

The annual meeting of the Wisconsin editorial association is held at White water this week. The pleasure excursion connected with it will be to Ashland.

Chicago never lags in any of its enterprises. Between the date of General Grant's death and that of his burial, it raised money enough to build an imposing monument. No other city in the country has done this.

The telephone has been introduced into almost every town of consequence of England and Scotland. There are 12,000 telephone exchanges in England and over 41,000,000 messages were sent through the telephone last year. The royalty paid by the telephone companies to the postoffice department during the same time was $100,000.

The famous Mexican Gulf ship canal below New Orleans, which cost the state and private citizens somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, was sold at public auction last week for the sum of $1,200,000. A citizen of New Orleans became the purchaser for $225. The canal is at present in a sadly neglected condition, and in one place is impassable, owing to a steamboat having sunk there some time since.

Twenty thousand Hungarians who have been working in the Pennsylvania mines are preparing to migrate in a body to Northwestern Canada, where the Dominion government will give them 200,000 acres of fertile land. They were agricultural peasants in their native land and are tired of mining. This is the largest movement of population in a single body that has ever occurred in this country.

Since the publication of Postmaster General Vilas' circular, in which, says an exchange, the editing of a party newspaper was mentioned as one proof of "offensive partisanship" in republican postmasters, three democratic editors in Virginia, in charge of the Norfolk Virginian, the Lynchburg Virginian, and the Warrenton Index, have been appointed postmasters. Their papers are filled with the most personal and malignant political attacks, some of them aimed against individual republicans and others against the supreme court of the United States. But this sort of partisanship does not seem to be offensive when exhibited by democratic postmasters. Of course not. It is not offensive for a democratic editor to go republican, but extremely offensive for a republican to tell the truth about the democratic party.

Not long ago, when the ex-confederate general, Buckner, was at Richfield Springs, New York, he heard some military skeptics criticizing General Grant's military ability. "Why, Hooker was as brave as Grant," said one man, excitedly. "But Grant was a very near man," said Buckner. "And McClellan was a great strategist," said another scoffler. "But Grant was famous for his earnestness," said Buckner. "He may not have been brave, but he was always near." "What do you mean by nearness?" asked another scoffler petulantly. "Why, when I looked around at Fort Donelson for some one to surrender to, Grant was right there handy; and I notice when General Lee surrendered at Appomattox, Grant was the nearest General to take his sword. Oh, he was near, Grant was." General Buckner should have added that General Grant was so near his troops all the time that he never got a furlough during the war.

Mr. Miller, the democratic commissioner of internal revenue has made a preliminary report on the general condition of the internal revenue service. The report says the total collections for the fiscal year, amounting to $112,420,111, have been properly accounted for and the money covered into the treasury of the United States. The cost of collecting the internal revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, was about $4,800,000, being 3.9 per cent of the amount collected, and $500,000 less than in the year 1884. This is a pretty good republican campaign document, for the country has been told time after time by democratic speakers and newspapers that the internal revenue was the collection of the internal revenue. But now a democratic official has given, in the republican party a certificate of a high character.

The following observation on the condition of the times will be worth reading and remembering:

Business in general is improving, and has been growing better for a year. But now the people are of opinion that the time has come for it to be marked by a new era of commercial stagnation. The speculators, quick to observe the moods of the market, are discounting the visible change in public opinion. The pessimistic era is past, and the time has come for it to be marked by a new era of commercial stagnation. The speculators, quick to observe the moods of the market, are discounting the visible change in public opinion. The pessimistic era is past, and the time has come for it to be marked by a new era of commercial stagnation.

It is a remarkable thing that the "hard times" if the present business stagnation is to receive that name, occurs when the country is flooded with abundance. Usually in this country, and always in other countries, pinching times take place when money is scarce, and when the laboring man is oppressed, and when the land is full of plenty. But in the United States, there is more money per capita than ever before, and the people never had more to eat than they have to-day.

The State Journal has this to say about the coming state fair: "Secretary Clinton Babbitt, of the state agricultural society, has gone to Bayfield, where he intends to make arrangements with the Indian lacrosse team to play a game at the state fair. The fair opens at Madison on Monday, September 7th, and continues five days. For Wednesday, Governor Oglesby and John A. Logan were invited by Mr. Babbitt, but they were unable to come. Senator Ben Harrison, of Indiana, and Senator John C. Spooner, of Wisconsin, will be present and make addresses. Thursday will be governor's day, when Governor Rusk and Norman J. Coleman, national commissioner of agriculture, have agreed to deliver addresses. Friday will, however, be the great day. It will be children's and temperance day. Mr. Babbitt says: 'I have got some rattling speakers, and you can bet on it, they will throw St. John completely in the shade. There will be on Friday a grand display of Shetland pony races, driven by Mrs. Bishop and Miss Bishop, the wife and daughter of the man who imported the ponies from the island of Shetland. They will come around a half-mile track.' Mr. Babbitt says there is no doubt that this fair will be larger than ever before. In accordance with the law passed by the legislature last winter, no gambling or liquor-selling will be allowed on the grounds."

The bells of thousands of cities and towns throughout the country toll a solemn knell, and minute guns speak in deep-mouthed voice of the grief of a nation, as the telegraph Saturday dashed from end to end of the land the announcements of movement of the funeral pageant in New York, and its arrival at the place of sepulture. Everywhere the funeral bled shrouded public and private buildings, and long columns of men marched to the stately music of the dirge. Memorial services were held at night in innumerable places and the whole land testified to the nation's grief as the dust of the great soldier was returned to the Mother Earth.

A Magnificent Pageant, New York, Aug. 10.—The mortuary honors paid to Ulysses S. Grant Saturday were the most imposing and distinguished ever paid to an American citizen. The history of the country does not reveal similar honors paid to a public man. In that respect the honors to the great conqueror of the rebellion stand unrivaled and are likely to stand for all time to come. So vast a multitude, so distinguished a line of mourners, so earnest and patriotic a sentiment, and so sincere a desire to honor the illustrious dead have never before characterized the sad rites paid to statesmen. It is estimated that there must have been nearly 50,000 people in the ranks of the most distinguished in the land. The president and his cabinet, the highest military and naval representatives of the republic, the governors of nearly all the states, delegations from both branches of congress, foreign ministers, members of the supreme court, leading scientists, and members of the press, and finally, a vast procession, passing through vast lines of mourners that thronged ten miles of streets, paid their tribute to the honored man. The tightly sealed dust fell the city ball at 6:00 a. m., and it was placed in the vault at Riverside amid the booming of cannon, at 6:15 p. m. The vast cortege took nearly nine hours to make the solemn march. The day opened beautiful and bright. At shortly after midnight, the great crowd of visitors having ceased their efforts to obtain a sight of the body, the remains were placed in charge of the undertakers, to be finally closed to human gaze. This action was rendered imperative by reason of the imperfect work of the embalmers. Painful as was the fact, it could no longer be delayed, and the remains must no longer be exposed to view. At 1 o'clock, therefore, the lid of the casket was screwed on, and the body of Gen. Grant passed forever from human gaze. For the remainder of the night silent policemen stood up and down in front of the huge iron gates of the rotunda, and the grim members of the Grand Army post intrusted with the vigil stood silent and motionless. It was 4 o'clock when the red streaks of dawn crept over the Battery and the deserted chimneys of Trinity broke the main. In a few moments St. Paul's windows threw out a pale light, and the dim strains of martial music burst upon the air. There were early comers from Brooklyn and Jersey City eager to take their places in the line. They knew it would wait long hours of weary waiting. Hour after hour went by and long before 8 o'clock the City Hall park and all the vacant place north of the postoffice was filled to suffocation. Shortly before 9 o'clock a portly looking officer, gray and loping, reined in at the head of a brilliant staff, and dismounting passed mournfully up the steps. This was Maj. Gen. Hancock. At the same time a band of musical drums, the David Island band, filed in and played a solemn dirge. Here came another touching incident. Over 1000 members of the Grand Army of the Republic, led by Gen. A. J. Drexel, another dear friend of the dead hero, and feeling that the battlefield was yet an hour away, the president, warmly arrayed in being an object of staring curiosity, retired again to the protection of the hotel. By this time the throng was so dense that the police, under the vigorous baton of Capt. Williams, had much difficulty in making way for the carriages, which were here to join the line. Carriages containing the Grant family, all of whom were present save the widow of the commander, who still keeps her faithful watch at Mt. McGregor, waited near the hotel to join the mournful procession and take position behind the funeral car. They were followed by the most distinguished of the guests, with the president, who was seated with Secretary Bayard, at the head. Quietly keeping his place with the cabinet, the great and handsome face of Postmaster General Vilas, the graceful and forcible eloquist of the dead commander at the banquet of the Army of the Tennessee five years ago, was noticeable. Among the governors the good gray-haired Oglesby, of Illinois, was conspicuous. With a narrow compass was seen such a gathering of the notables of the nation as no other occasion could bring together.
